About Williston

Williston was founded in 1887 and was named after Daniel Willis James who served on the board of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. The region is well stocked with an abundance of wildlife for the outdoor enthusiast. Located only a few miles from Lake Sakakawea, fishing for walleye and northern pike is the favorite pastime of many.

Williston is located near the confluence of the Yellowstone and Missouri Rivers near the site where Meriwether Lewis and William Clark reunited on the way back to St. Louis after their famous expedition. There are many interesting historic sites in our region, the most notable being the restored fur trading post known as Fort Union. Professional NBA coach Phil Jackson and four time world championship boxer Virgil Hill, both called Williston home and attended high school here.

Today nearly 17,500 people call Williston their home. Many have been drawn here because of the opportunities for future growth. The economy here is based mainly on oil and agriculture.

Williston continues to maintain steady growth and is the heart beat of a prospering North Dakota economy providing opportunities to families looking for a community with a future, economic stability and low crime rate.

The city's economy is currently experiencing rapid growth in housing, career options and quality of life.

We welcome you to become a part of our community, enjoy the family friendly lifestyle, the great outdoors and to be a part of a growing community and region.
